The World around us is a very complex formation, plenty of interdependencies. The program of research workshop is being designed so as to explain children the World being a logical series of interdependencies. We do not separate physics from life sciences or chemistry from archeology. The October workshop will be devoted to dinosaurs. Dinosaurs were dominating our planet for over 160 millions of years and have disappeared suddenly. Today they are in the heart of the children's interests, backed by a true science named paleontology. For this reason the serious contemplations of young researchers will be initiated by their participation in diggings.
